César Manrique – Where Nature and Art Combine

The tour begins with a visit to Fundación César Manrique, a foundation focused on showcasing Manrique's strong personal commitment to his work and his ecological vision. It was this vision that led him to reconvert a set of volcanic bubbles into his own home in El Taro de Tahíche, now the foundation's home. Touring Manrique's rooms, decorated with works of his own art and pieces from his private collection, is the best way to glimpse the mind and talent of this incomparable artist. Next, see Lagomar, a museum, restaurant, bar and private hillside residence that stands out due to its great natural and architectural appeal, on a National Geographic visit. Situated in the village of Nazaret in the municipality of Costa Teguise, the residence is built into an ancient volcanic quarry, using its lava as construction material. Lagomar is the surrounding nature, as the existing tunnels, recesses and terraces were formed from the molten lava released by a volcanic eruption. Lagomar perfectly reflects the spirit of Manrique, with a large part of it completed by his friend Jesús Soto. While at Lagomar, you'll meet the property's current owner, architect Beatriz van Hoff, who will share information about the property and her friendship with César Manrique. Travelling to the north of the island, see some of the mobiles Manrique created as part of his sculpture work, inspired by the windmills abundant in Lanzarote's past (Manrique called these mobile structures 'wind toys'). Enjoy a guided tour of Mirador del Río, the site built by Manrique to verify his hypothesis that humans could respect nature's essence and at the same time achieve an artistic and functional space for the tourism economy. Elevated on one of the cliffs of Famara, 470 m (1,542 ft) above the sea, this location was previously used as a defence point for the island. Enjoy a glass of local wine or other refreshment whilst taking in the scenic splendour that inspired Manrique.

La Geria: Vineyards That Sprouted From Fire

Begin the excursion with a walk (approximately 2 km/1.2 mi) from the main road of La Geria to Bodega Nacho Romero. Along the way, relish incredible views of the unique landscape that surrounds you. The vineyards of La Geria on the island of Lanzarote are a treat for the eyes. Traditionally, each vine was protected by a hand-built wall of lava rocks to shield it from the wind. Upon arriving at the winery, enjoy a National Geographic exclusive opportunity to meet Nacho Romero, the winery owner, biologist and winemaker, who will share his experiences using the century-old system of cultivation that uses conic-shaped holes to allow the vines to reach the soil, which lies beneath a dense layer of volcanic ash. The method, adapted due to a series of volcanic eruptions that forever altered the soil, is hard work, but has led to a beautiful landscape that is known for its unique way of growing grapes from the volcanic ash. While at the private home bodega, sample some of the delicious wines produced there, where the local varietal, La Malvasía Volcánica, is considered to be amongst the oldest white grapes in the world. On the walk back to the pier, be sure to admire the unique volcanic landscape and the area's peculiar wine plantations with a newly found admiration for the local ingenuity in adapting to the environment whilst keeping local traditions alive.
